Transitional Style

Transitional style features solid furniture items of a larger size and robust structure, with curved lines and focus on comfort, typical for traditional interiors. The lack of too much ornamentation, the arrangement straight lines, and the clear restriction in number, though, celebrates the minimalist trends of the contemporary style. The result is stunning – lavish sophistication displayed with modest simplicity.

Urban Style

The emphasis of urban style interiors lies on elements and designs that bring the gritty vibe of the urban context indoors. Not afraid to experiment with unusual materials and features, this interior design style takes its pick of ideas to arrive at distinctive, and often bohemian, looks.

Contemporary Style

The Contemporary style, by its very definition, is current and therefore is an ever evolving palette that echoes prevalent trends and tastes at any given time. As such it is tricky to characterize this style as a set of given ideas, intentions or traits; however, as a design style it diverges from the modernist aesthetic by a presenting a more balanced and rounded approach to interior design.

Industrial Style

Industrial interiors celebrate the modernist eye for efficiency and functionality by transforming the working parts of a building into its primary aesthetic. Beams, columns, pipes, ducts and flanges are brought to the fore to emphasize the 'machine for living', rendering these interiors in a largely masculine overtone. Unlike many other offshoots of the modern movement, industrial style interiors do not shy away from weight or roughness, embracing the worn, recycled and salvaged.

Scandinavian Style

Like its other modernist counterparts, Scandinavian style embodies a move towards simplicity, functionality and efficiency; it also however brings an emphasis on affordability to the palette.

Stirred by democratic design ideals, scandinavian design strikes a careful balance between minimalist efficiency and warm, personal invitations.

Traditional / Classic Style

Traditional style interiors are set apart by their silhouettes; winged back chairs, elaborate furniture pieces, claw footed tables, and other furniture and feature designs usually have their origins in 18th century English, Neoclassical, French Country or Colonial styles.

The backdrops are usually pale and simple, with rich colours, lines and profiles imbuing classical opulence into the space.

Country Style

Cozy is key when designing country styled interiors, as these spaces evoke the warm embrace of a timeless cottage. As such this style can root in different traditions and therefore can vary significantly in its outward vocabulary. However each of these palettes is united in their love and appreciation of the organic and the rustic. Wood, pottery, and a host of organic materials populate these spaces, carved out in a typically intimate scale and character.

Eclectic Interior Design Style

Surprising, unexpected and unafraid to break the rules, eclectic style interiors personify individuality and freedom. With no guidelines or intentions per se to box it in, this style borrows freely from others, harmonizing a gamut of ideas and inspirations to suit the space and purpose at hand. At its core this design style comes with a lot of variation and layering, deftly using these to create an overall rhythm that animates the interior and saves it from being utterly overwhelming.

Vintage Style

Contrary to popular opinion, vintage style isn't about recreating a flea market in your home; not everything old has vintage charm. Instead this style pays homage to the 1940s and 50s, where in the aftermath of WWII people mixed and matched, working with whatever was available, to rebuild their homes and create warm, loving spaces. It is this 'mix and match' aesthetic, largely brought alive through the time worn and tested, that sets vintage interiors apart.

Asian / Zen Interior Design

Bringing the core tenets of traditional Japanese philosophy to life, Zen style interiors, just like their namesake, are about balance, harmony and consideration. Unlike most other styles, Zen spaces are less occupied with making an impact and more concerned with introducing silence and stillness, inside and out, into your day. Colours are soft and natural in tone, with chromatic harmony and continuity balancing surfaces and spaces.

Bohemian Style

Bohemian style is associated with free-minded and free-spirited people who express their personal unconventional philosophy of living unconstrained by any norms of the contemporary society. Their outstanding individuality shows in the interiors of their homes, too. The space is busy, both in number of items, as much as in shapes and forms. Fabrics and accessories burst in flamboyant tones, prints, and patterns, creating a cheerful balance of the free-spirited style of life.

Tropical Style

Tropical style interiors are all about the romantics of the endless beaches, the lush jungles and the vibrant colours of the exotic lands. Inspired by Nature, this interior design style features abundance of natural materials and colour palettes characteristic for the Tropics in its flamboyant beauty. Key furniture items are of simple design and are made of wood, as this material is primary in a tropical house. Doors, tables, beds, chairs, cabinets and storage items feature royal teak, cozy bamboo or rattan, delicate wicker, or majestic mahogany.

Rustic Style

With its classical simplicity and warm homey feel, the Rustic style stands out among the most popular interior styles that are “evergreen”.

The rustic style colour palettes may vary from darker shades of brown to whitewashed tones of neutral colours. Decoration features lots of hand-crafted, salvaged or repurposed items made of wood, leather, natural fibers, wicker and wrought iron.
