Ottawa, ON

As Canada's capital, Ottawa is home to the nation's Parliament Buildings, instantly recognisable for their impressive Gothic-Revival façades.

Parliament Hill is far from the only beautiful place in Ottawa, though, and the city is full of national museums, university and college campuses and other cool-looking official buildings. Munch on maple-leaf-shaped cookies at the city's famous ByWard Market or wander the Rideau Canal, which freezes over in the winter and serves as an enormous skating rink.

Victoria, BC

The capital of British Columbia sits pretty on the tip of Vancouver Island, just off Canada's west coast, making for some extraordinary views as well as some of the mildest weather in the country.

The jewel of Victoria is its gorgeous Inner Harbour, ringed by BC's parliament buildings, the historic ivy-covered Empress Hotel and monuments to local Indigenous communities.

The city is also known for its lush gardens, with colourful beds and planters down almost every street.

Quebec City, QC

No city in Canada is more postcard-worthy than Québec - particularly its Old Town, which could pass as a fairy-tale European village. The only surviving fortified city in Canada and the United States, there's a beautiful church, monument or crumbling section of wall around every corner.

This history, plus bucket-list sites like the Plains of Abraham and the Chateau Frontenac hotel, form a big part of Québec's appeal, along with its prime position on the mighty St Lawrence River.

Toronto, ON

Big cities aren't always exactly 'beautiful', but Canada's largest metropolis has loads of visual appeal. The classic Victorian homes in the inner city make Toronto a calming place to wander around, and many visitors happily get lost on streets lined with dreamy brick houses and old-growth trees.

Torontonians aren't all fans of the more modern developments on the waterfront, but, along with the famous CN Tower, the buildings on the shore do create a spectacular skyline.

Lethbridge, AB

This small city in southern Alberta sits on the edge of the province's Badlands region, resulting in some wild, otherworldly topography.

The city's most striking structure is the Lethbridge Viaduct, also known as the High Level Bridge, a massive railway trestle that brings trains into town.

Lethbridge's downtown district is also pleasant and pretty, with its brick buildings and large public park.

Vancouver, BC

This coastal metropolis is undoubtedly one of the most beautiful cities in the world, combining rugged west coast nature with glassy modern buildings. The heart of Vancouver is Stanley Park, a 400-hectare patch of west coast rainforest complete with bike paths, viewpoints and the Vancouver Aquarium.

The rest of the city is crisscrossed with waterways that reflect off the windows of all those glass towers, as well as intriguing neighbourhoods lined with trees, cool shops and restaurants.

Winnipeg, MB

Manitoba's capital and largest city showcases a particular kind of rugged, gritty beauty. Winnipeg's downtown is full of stone heritage buildings, many of which now house shops and restaurants run by young entrepreneurs.

The area around the confluence of the Red and Assiniboine rivers - known as the Forks - is the key neighbourhood to visit, with landmarks like the Esplanade Riel Bridge and the Canadian Museum For Human Rights nearby.

Montreal, QC

Montreal is among the most arts-minded cities in North America, reflected in its quirky mix of historic and modern architecture, laid-back parks and public art.

Situated mostly on an island in the St Lawrence River, there's water all around the city and mountains looming beyond it - a bucolic backdrop for one of Canada's larger urban centres. Its buildings are also gorgeous; highlights include the Second Empire-style City Hall, Gothic-Revival Notre-Dame Basilica and the modern 1970s look of the Olympic Stadium.

Halifax, NS

Boasting a blend of historic buildings, like those at the Halifax Citadel that date back to 1749, and natural coastal beauty, Halifax is a monument to the friendly east coast spirit. The downtown waterfront features 2.5 miles (4km) of wooden boardwalk, offering views of passing boats and plenty of restaurants serving sumptuous local seafood. Get on the water and paddle out into the harbour to get the best view of the city's sparkling skyline.

Calgary, AB

The gateway to the Rocky Mountains, Calgary sits snugly between some of the world's most gorgeous peaks to the east, and vast fields of golden wheat and canola fields to the west.

The city itself is full of fantastic architecture, with striking modern buildings like the new Central Library, the National Music Centre, the Bow office tower and the pedestrian Peace Bridge. The city is also rich with green space and lays claim to the most extensive urban pathway and bikeway system in North America.

Charlottetown, PEI

Prince Edward Island is widely considered one of Canada's most charming and attractive provinces, and that sentiment extends to its capital city.

Charlottetown is relatively small (as befits Canada's tiniest province), but that's part of its appeal. From the waterfront views and cute shops at Peake's Wharf to the storybook maritime architecture of places like Beaconsfield House and the Brighton Beach Range Lighthouse, Charlottetown is easy on the eyes and the soul.

Edmonton, AB

Much further north than most of Canada's bigger cities, Edmonton has an energetic arts community and its own distinctive vibe. The vast swathes of urban parkland in the North Saskatchewan River Valley give the city a fresh and dynamic feel, as does the big, sunny Alberta sky.

While there are plenty of interesting buildings to look at (the ultra-modern Art Gallery of Alberta is a must-see), keep your eyes peeled for wildlife – it's not unheard of to see moose strolling within the city limits.

Regina, SK

Regina doesn't get as much fanfare as its neighbour Saskatoon, but it's a lovely city in its own right. The provincial capital's Wascana Centre is a tranquil city park with a 120-acre lake and miles of paved and natural trails, as well as a habitat conservation area housing 276 species of bird and 36 species of mammal.

For some urban flair, Regina's Warehouse District positions itself as 'the soul of the city', with shops, restaurants and other businesses bringing new life to handsome old-brick warehouses.
